Excerpt: . . . in relation to the origin of living beings, and even we cannot positively deny that life connected with some form was not co-eternal with time, space, and matter, and that all living beings have not successively and divergently ascended from the lowest types. (Description of Remains of Extinct Mammalia. Journal Acad. Nat. Sciences, N. 1, iii. 167.) 8. That each well-marked cranial type admits of certain variations in its individual characters, which variations constitute divergent forms. 9. That these divergent forms must not be confounded with hybrid types. Both, it is true, are produced by modifications in the mode of action of the developing principle; in the former, however, these modifications depend upon climatic conditions, in the latter they result from race-amalgamation. 10. That reasons exist for considering some, at least, of the so-called artificial deformations as strictly natural types, representing very...
