Stimulated by the example of England and Japan, Germany developed her industrial art schools and museums during the twenty-five years preceding the war. An investigation of the art and industrial education of that country was made in 1912 by James P. Haney, Director of Art in the New York City High Schools, and published by the Board of Education of that city. This report describes the various types of continuation and evening schools for journeymen; industrial art schools (35) found in all the more important towns and supported by city and state; and the professional schools (24) each dealing with the education of the artist-artisan in one special subject such as ceramics, wood carving, jewelry, etc. The school of graphic art at Leipzig, the center of the book trade, is a model of practical equipment and professional instruction. At Munich the school of photography...
